

Aarti Dhingra

Aarti is an architect with a flair for ecological design and a deep interest in the visual arts. Protégée of M.N. Ashish Ganju, she spent the formative years of her professional life living in a small Himalayan village in Kumaon, managing construction projects in remote rural areas on hilly terrain where resources, climate, working conditions, worldviews, and the concept of time are quite different from cities. Being conscious of the social-ecological processes linked with architecture, her work focuses on developing sustainable building practices through indigenous ecological knowledge.

She holds a Bachelors in Architecture from the School of Planning and Architecture Delhi, a dual Masters in Integrated Urbanism and Sustainable Design from University of Stuttgart in Germany, and a Postgraduate Diploma from Building Beauty Sorrento.
